

The documentary film by the author Sladjana Zaric, titled “Serbia in the Great War”, was presented on 2 June, at the Embassy of the Republic of Serbia in London. This cultural event was realized in cooperation of the Serbian Embassy with the crew of the Radio Television of Serbia (RTS). In his opening remarks for the evening, Ambassador Ognjen Pribicevic expressed his delight that London was the place of the film’s first screening outside Serbia. In addition to numerous guests, representatives of the diplomatic corps and Serbian diaspora, and historian Milos Kovic, the screening of the film was also attended by Sir Thomas Troubridge, the grandson of Admiral Ernest Troubridge, whose role in the Serbian Army during World War I and contribution to the defence of Belgrade are to be featured in the forthcoming RTS documentary “Serbs in Corfu Island”.